2. CLOZE TEST

Read the passage below and then fill the blank spaces with the most appropriate words. Use only ONE word in each space. (10 marks)

On paper, John Fugazzie had done everything right prior to his two extended bouts with unemployment, the most recent of which began in 2012, about three years after the Great Recession officially ended.

He'd graduated from college and …1……on to earn a master's degree in business administration at Rutgers University. He'd accumulated decades of experience on the management side of the food and supermarket industry. He'd held job titles ranging …2……..senior merchandising manager to director of sales and marketing to executive vice president. He'd even maintained his own consulting business on the side to bring in extra income and hopefully provide a cushion …3…… things at his day job go south.

But for two roughly 18-month periods in the span of only six years, Fugazzie carried another title: unemployed.

"I have …4……..pretty hard-luck story. I hit the worst of all of it. I lost my house. I lost all of my retirement funds," he says. "I had a …5……. successful career. I spent a lot of time in the food industry, moved up the ladder. …6…….. I needed to change a job, it was like no problem. … I didn't understand what was going on."

While the U.S. economy continued to shed positions well after the Great Recession ended in 2009, the country has created more than 14 million new jobs …7……. the ongoing labor market recovery. There are more Americans working nowadays than has …8……. been the case, and the country's unemployment rate last month dropped to a multiyear low of 4.7 percent.

But Fugazzie will be the first to tell you …9…… government metrics don't tell the whole story of what's happening in the domestic economy.

"…10…… not an accurate reflection of the marketplace, and it hasn't been for years," he says. "In the national dialogue, they throw out that we can create jobs. The reality of it is we need a lot more jobs than we have."
